NEW LAW ELIMINATES CHAIRMANSHIP CONTEST

Cannot Elect Successor to Chairman Quigley Before April, 1912.

HOLDS ON UNTIL 1913.

Recently Enacted Primaries Law Says Party Officers Shall be Elected at Spring Primary in Even-Numbered Years Only.

Under the provisions of the new uniform primary law, passed by the Legislature last week, there can be no contest this year for Republican County Chairman in Centre County. The explanation of this is that no County chairman or other party officers can be elected this year in any County in the State. Republican County Chairman Henry C. Quigley, therefore, holds over until January 1, 1913. His successor cannot be elected until the second Saturday in April, 1912. The County chairman then elected will serve for two years, according to the interpretation of the new primary law by W. Harry Baker, secretary of the Republican State Committee.

Several weeks ago County Chairman Quigley announced his candidacy for re-election at the regular primaries scheduled for this year. At the same time Sheriff W. E. Hurley entered the field as a candidate and indications pointed to a vigorous friendly contest for the honor. Since that time, however, the new primary law has been passed and under its provisions the anticipated contest here necessarily goes up in smoke. This news will be welcomed by every Republican in Centre County interested in the success of the entire party ticket next November.

Section 2, of the new primary law, fixes the time for holding primaries, as follows:

> The said primaries shall be held on the last Saturday of September in all odd-numbered years, and on the second Saturday of April in all even-numbered years. The primary held on the last Saturday of September shall be known as the Fall primary, and the primary held on the second Saturday of April shall be known as the Spring primary.

As may be seen, the foregoing section of the new law designates how the two primaries shall be termed and when each shall be held. The following section of the new primary law designates at which primary election party officers, including County chairman, shall be elected:

> And such party officers as are provided for by the rules of the several political parties, to be elected by vote of the party electors, shall be elected at the Spring primary.

Since there can be no Spring primary held until next year, there can be no County chairman elected before 1912. In a letter, interpreting the new primary law, Secretary Baker, of the Republican State Committee, says:

> Enclosed please find copy of the Uniform Primary Act, which authorizes the election of all party officers at the Spring Primary and, inasmuch as Spring Primaries are only held in even numbered years, I am of the opinion that it would be necessary for the County Chairmen and all party officers to be elected for two years.

Had the old primaries law not been changed by the present Legislature the new County chairman for Centre County would have been elected in June, next. The new law, however, places an entirely different aspect on the matter and, as explained, there can be no contest since a County chairman may be elected only at a Spring primary election and there can be no Spring primary election held until 1912.

DESERTED FROM ARMY

Brinton Mongan, Bellefonte Boy, Captured by Govt. Officers.

Brinton Mongan, of Bellefonte, soon tired of regular army life after enlisting at Altoona, and deserted, only to be captured by the government officers. Just what punishment will be meted out to him has not been announced.

Mongan, who is 21 years old, and well known in Bellefonte, enlisted at Altoona on March 1, last, and subsequently was sent to the Columbus barracks, at Columbus, Ohio. He was still in training and had not been assigned to a regiment when, on March 18, he deserted. Immediately after he disappeared printed cards, containing his photograph and a detailed description, were sent from Washington, D. C., to the police of every city and town in the United States, and a reward of $50 offered for his capture. In the printed announcements of captures, issued yesterday, the name of Mongan appeared in the list of deserters picked up and held pending decision as to punishment.

Thanks God for President Taft.

Dr. Charles F. Aked, after four years of service in New York, delivered his farewell sermon at the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church Sunday and left for San Francisco on Monday, to assume the pastorate of the First Congregational Church. One thousand persons crowded in the church, which normally holds 600, and a special squad of police had to be called to restrain the hundreds outside. Moist eyes and handshaking followed the sermon.

Dr. Aked referred to President Taft as the "inspired leader" in the cause of international peace. "Let us thank God," he said, "for William Howard Taft, President of the United States, for his inspired leadership in the cause of internationol peace. In doing so he has taken rank with the greatest benefactors of the human race. Great Britain is aroused to reciprocate the good will of the President of the United States and will speak with a single voice.

"Glory and honor to the two greatest nations of the world, who shall lead the world in a way of age-long peace. Let us dream with Mr. Taft of a treaty making in international brotherhood. Let us dream with Andrew Carnegie, the biggest, boldest, bravest dream that mortal man ever dared to dream—the federation of the English-speaking people of the earth."

But 13 Days to Live.

Unless the execution should be postponed, which is not regarded as at all probable, Bert Delige, the convicted murderer of Mrs. John Baudis, at Scotia, has but thirteen days to live. His execution is scheduled for Tuesday, April 25. The scaffold on which the execution will take place was taken out of storage this week and will be overhauled to have it in readiness for the occasion. The rope to be used at the execution will be thoroughly tested in advance to guard against any emergency. Delige was recently measured for the suit of clothes, which he will wear on the scaffold and in which he will be buried.

Terribly Afflicted.

Returning to his duty after a three months' siege of typhoid fever, William Kephart, of Lewistown, 30 years old, was caught under a falling door at the Standard Steelworks on Saturday morning and had both legs crushed. The right leg has since been amputated at the knee. Kephart, in company with John White, was passing through the entrance to the steel foundry when a traveling crane with hooks and chains swinging and clanking, approached. A loose hook caught the roll of the heavy steel door scraping the skin from his back, but Kephart was less fortunate.

KEPT MARRIAGE SECRET UNTIL SCHOOL CLOSED

Bride and Groom Continued to Teach in Ferguson Twp. Schools.

AFRAID OF DIRECTORS

Harry Rossman, of State College, and Verna Stevenson, of Bellefonte, Wed Last November—Suppress News to Hold Positions as Teachers.

An interesting romance has just come to the surface in which Miss Verna Stevenson, the pretty and attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Stevenson, of Bellefonte, figured as the star in a little love drama, demonstrating that when a woman undertakes to plan a game of strategy she generally carries it out to success.

It is generally understood that most of the school directors in Centre county are opposed to employing married women as teachers, because they think that a married woman's place is to teach in the home and not in the school room. For some time Miss Verna and Harry Rossman, a pleasing young man of State College, had been deeply in love. They were both school teachers and taught in Ferguson township. Their devotion to each other finally became so strong that they decided that life's pathway would be very rugged and desolate without their constant companionship.

The bond of matrimony seemed to be the only medium through which to eliminate from their minds the unpleasant thought of parting when their respective schools closed. The bride-to-be, however, desired to teach out the full term, while at the same time Mr. Rossman wanted the nuptial event to take place before the close of the school term. The barrier against a married woman teaching was in the way, but, as the old maxim goes, "Love often laughs at locksmiths," and so they decided to circumvent the one obstacle in their path, by taking a little trip to Hagerstown, Md., where, in November, last, they were married by Rev. Townsend, in the First Disciple church.

"Mum" was now the word. They returned and resumed teaching. They associated with each other as usual but let fall no word that would give away their secret. The schools closed this week and when the bride returned to Bellefonte she sprung a surprise on her parents and friends by presenting the marriage certificate, which confirmed her announcement. Everything proved harmonious, and for the time being Mrs. Rossman will make her home with Mrs. Christ Swartz, in Bellefonte. The groom will divide his time between Bellefonte and State College until they get ready to go to housekeeping.

Unionville Couple Wed.

Miss Pauline Winifred Smith and Howard Cassady Peters, both of Unionville, were married at Altoona on Tuesday last. The ceremony was performed at the home of Mrs. Joseph W. Hoover, 2423 Eighth Avenue, Rev. Simpson B. Evans, pastor of the Eight Avenue Methodist Episcopal church, officiating. The beautiful ring ceremony was used and the ceremony was witnessed by three sisters of the groom, including the hostess, Mrs. Hoover. Both Mr. and Mrs. Peters are well and favorably known in Unionville and have a host of friends who will wish them much happiness. They will reside at Unionville.

Miss Patton to Wed.

Invitations have been issued by Congressman and Mrs. Charles E. Patton, of Curwensville, for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Emma Marguerite Patton, to William Kennedy Ewing, on Thurday, evening April 27, at the Curwensville Methodist Episcopal church. The wedding ceremony will be followed by a large reception.

No Decisions Given.

Great throngs gathered in the supreme court, at Washington, D. C., on Monday and were again doomed to disappointment when no decisions in the big cases were handed down. The judges will probably now keep the people in suspense until after their Easter vacation.

Legislature Adjourns May 25.

The Pennsylvania Legislature will adjourn, finally, on Thursday, May 25. A resolution, fixing that date for adjournment, was adopted by both Senate and House on Monday night. This leaves but six weeks in which the Legislature may consider matters before it.

Trout season opens on Saturday.

TWO LINE NEWS ITEM REVEALS AN ELOPEMENT

Grace Steele, of Bellefonte, and Cecil B. Craig Married March 10.

WENT TO CUMBERLAND

Marriage Ceremony, Performed in Maryland, Comes to Light When Notice of License is Published in an Altoona Newspaper.

A quiet elopement to Cumberland, Md., where they were married four weeks ago, and successfully keeping the news from becoming public on their return home, marked the culmination of a romance in which Miss Grace Steele, daughter of Mrs. W. L. Steele, of Bellefonte, and Cecil B. Craig, of York, a former Academy student, were the principals. Now the news is out and they are receiving the congratulations of their friends.

On March 8th., last, Miss Steele left for Altoona, where she was met by Mr. Craig, and together they attended a house party. On the second day of the festivities Miss Steele and Mr. Craig decided to go to Cumberland, where they were united in marriage by Rev. Edward Hayes, of the Centre Street Methodist Episcopal church.

Up until last week the wedding had been kept a secret to all their friends and even the members of their respective families, and no doubt would still be a secret had it not been for the keen eye of the exchange editor of the Altoona "Mirror," who noticed several Central Pennsylvania marriage license in a Cumberland paper and reprinted them in the Altoona paper. On Friday a copy of the article in the "Mirror" fell into the hands of Miss Steele's family, and upon being asked to explain, she confessed to her marriage to Mr. Craig on the 10th of last month.

The bride is a member of the younger social set of Bellefonte and is a very charming and interesting young lady. Mr. Craig is an industrious young man and holds a responsible position with the Allegheny Mining Company, at Creighton, Pa. He resided in Bellefonte while attending the Academy.

The announcement of the wedding comes as a complete surprise to their many friends, who join in wishing them much happiness and prosperity.

Red Men's Banquet.

Wehasane Tribe, No. 71, Improved Order of Red Men, of Bellefonte, had a gala time on Friday night in their handsomely equipped rooms on the third floor of the Centre County Bank building. Watson, one of the most popular "Indians" in Snow Shoe and Clarence, who is the District Deputy of the order, was the installing officer and he did it up to the Queen's taste. With him was W. C. Kessling, of Snow Shoe, who also takes a great interest in the order of Red Men. Following the installation a splendid supper was served.

John Sourbeck, Jr., Injured.

John Sourbeck, Jr., son of John D. Sourbeck, of Bellefonte, was quite severely injured at Burnham, near Lewistown, on Monday night. He had charge of a large electrical welding machine in the works at that place, and in some way came in connection with the highly bolted machine. Fortunately he escaped instant death but the shock caused perfect blindness of both his eyes. He also was burned, more or less, about the face. Up to going to press it was impossible to tell whether his blindness would remain permanent or not.

Reduced Licenses.

Judge Baldridge, of the Blair county courts, had 92 liquor license applications for consideration last week, and refused 22 of them. He exercised the judicial prerogative and laid down stringent rules for the ones to whom he extended license privileges and directed that all licensed places should be closed at 11 p. m.

Boalsburg Easter Services.

Special Easter services will be held by the Sunday School in the Reformed church, at Boalsburg, on Easter Sunday, at 7.30 o'clock, P. M. An interesting program has been arranged.

Married to Please Dying Mother.

Learning that she was to die within a few hours from an incurable disease, Mrs. Esther Wilde, 50 years, of Clifton Heights, called her widowed daughter, Mrs. Edith Worthington, to her bedside and told her she was soon to pass away, and she wished her to marry John White, a young and industrious man, who for several years had boarded at the home of Mrs. Wilde.

Before calling her daughter to her bedside, she summoned a local magistrate and made out her last will, which was witnessed by the family physician, Dr. George R. Vernon. No sooner had she made her will than she called Mrs. Worthington to her side, and said:

"Edith, I want to see you married before I die; but you must act quickly, as I am fast passing away, and I wish you would marry John, who is steady and industrious."

Although there had been no courtship between the young couple, Mrs. Worthington instantly agreed to carry out her mother's dying wish.

"Call John upstairs," suggested Mrs. Wilde, and the young man was summoned to the sick chamber.

Mrs. Wilde repeated what she had said to her daughter and White also agreed. The hour was then too late to get a marriage license, and the nuptial ceremony was to have taken place the next morning, but Mrs. Wilde died; and so the marriage has been postponed until after the funeral.

Mrs. Worthington said that she and John proposed to fulfill the promise made to her mother.

Woman Swallowed a Pin.

Mrs. E. E. Heverly, of Mt. Eagle, several days ago accidentally swallowed a pin and all efforts thus far to locate it have been without results. Immediately on realizing what had happened, and fearing the pin might cause her serious trouble, Mrs. Heverly went to the Bellefonte hospital. There an examination was made but the pin could not be located. She returned to her home to await developments. She is up and about as usual, and experiencing no pain, although on several occasions she has suffered from nervous shock, due chiefly to constant fear that the pin may result in sudden illness at any time.

A Neat Compliment.

"The Republican" yesterday received a very neat compliment, and one we greatly appreciated, from A. J. Long, of Chicago, who is a valued subscriber. Mr. Long, after giving directions for changing the address to which his paper is to be sent, added:

"Enclosed find year's subscription. I am still well pleased with 'The Republican', and likely will be a reader for some time to come.".

HOPE TO SOLVE BRIDGE TROUBLE IN SIX WEEKS

New Plan to Hasten Improvements on Spring Creek Structure.

ONE GRAND JURY, ONLY

Now Contended Proper Authority to Proceed With Installing New Superstructure Need not be Deferred Until September.

An effort is being made to devise some plan whereby the Spring Creek bridge in Bellefonte, nearby the Bush House, may be repaired or replaced by a new superstructure in May, and thus avoid having the bridge, in its torn-up condition, remain an eye-sore until September. By some it is believed that such a plan can be worked out.

During the last few days a petition has been circulated and signed by citizens asking Judge Orvis to appoint a Board of Viewers to immediately inspect the bridge in its present condition and report on the necessity of prompt action.

Judge Orvis has appointed as viewers W. C. Snyder, the well known coal operator, of Snow Shoe; J. Will Mayes, proprietor of the Howard Marble & Granite Works, and a business man of wide experience, and George H. Emerick, of Centre Hall, one of the substantial citizens of that place.

By those suggesting this course of procedure it is contended that the matter may then be referred to the next Grand Jury, which will meet next month, and that no additional steps will be required other than to have the report, in the event it be favorable, approved by the court. In support of this plan it is declared that it will be unnecessary to refer the matter to a second Grand Jury before submitting it to the court. This would, of course, make it possible to start work installing a new superstructure in five or six weeks time.

"The Republican" respectfully urges upon those in authority—it seems to be a difficult matter to ascertain just who is in charge of the bridge at this time—that something be done, and that at once, to improve not only the appearance but the traffic condition of the bridge. As it now stands, one-half of the bridge is torn up and the ends fenced in with about the most unsightly concoction of boards and planks ever assembled for any purpose. To do this would require but a few dollars and a few hours labor, but the doing of it would go a great way toward softening the criticism by citizens of the blunders that already have attended the well meant but poorly advised efforts of those who originally undertook to bring about a long needed public improvement.

EASTER SERVICES

Every Church in Bellefonte Will Appropriately Observe the Occasion.

There is no place in the State which more fittingly observes Easter than just in Bellefonte. The End of His Rope

A Story of a Fortune Hunter In the Swiss Alps

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Interlaken, in the Swiss Alps, is a central point for tourists for making excursions either into the neighboring valleys or on to the mountains. The town, which is simply a cluster of hotels with a casino, is built on a plain between two lakes, deriving its name from its location, each lake about ten or a dozen miles long and about a mile wide. To the south of these lakes rise the peaks of the Bernese Alps—the Eiger, Jungfrau, Monch and others. From Interlaken a cog railway carries tourists up steep inclines to Grindelwald, Scheidig, and thence down to Lauterbrunnen. From Lauterbrunnen one may be swung up by cable several thousand feet to Murren, where a near view can be obtained of the surrounding group of mountains.

One summer some tourists started on the cog railway for Scheidig, from whence the men of the party intended to attempt to climb the Jungfrau. The cog railway now extends farther up the mountain, but at that time one could travel by rail no farther than Scheidig. In this party were Miss Delia Denton of New York and Mr. Archie Pendleton of Chicago. Miss Denton was an heiress, while Mr. Pendleton was a young lawyer of moderate means who had but recently been admitted to the bar.

Touring in Europe affords every facility for lovemaking, and Pendleton had availed himself of the opportunity to woo Miss Denton. He seemed about to secure the prize when a young Britisher, heir to an earldom, came upon the scene, and it became a tie between him and the American. Pendleton had the mortification and disappointment to see his suit held up by nothing more or less than a title. Worse than this, from the time Lord Boyingham entered the contest for Miss Denton's hand he treated the Chicagoan with that towering superiority which has made John Bull unpopular with all other races.

There are hotels at Scheidig, and it had been arranged that the ladies of the party should put up at one of them while the men made the attempt upon the mountain. There were three men intending to go up, but one of them, becoming fearful of his heart's action in the thin air even at Scheidig, decided not to risk a higher altitude. This left Boyingham and Pendleton the only ones to go except the guides. There were two guides, armed with axes and alpenstocks, one for each end of the little procession.

When the party left their friends standing on the porch of the hotel both Boyingham and Pendleton looked back at Miss Denton, each for a good by. Boyingham was elated, Pendleton depressed, for the smile she bestowed on the former had an evident meaning in it, while the one she gave Pendleton conveyed nothing more than good will. The men moved off, encouraged by a cheer from those who remained, and were soon lost by a turn in their path taking them around the side of the first mountain.

It was 10 o'clock when the climbers started, and the day was fine. Through a telescope on the porch they were watched, being occasionally seen like a dotted line far up on the mountain side. About noon the weather began to thicken, with frequent snow flurries, and they were visible no longer.

It was nearly night when two of the party, Lord Boyingham and one of the guides, Hans Dyckman, returned, their blanched faces and agitation denoting there had been an accident.

"Where are the others?" asked a clamor of voices in tones of dread.

"Lost, I fear," said Boyingham.

At that moment Delia Denton joined those about the returned climbers and, hearing Boyingham's words, staggered.

"What has happened?" asked all at once.

"Tell them, Hans," said Boyingham.

"The snow covered our way," said Hans, "and getting on was difficult. We were crossing a ridge. Brouwer was in advance, with Mr. Pendleton next, his lordship third and I fourth, all bound together by the rope. Brouwer and Mr. Pendleton had crossed and were cutting steps in the ice on the other side. Something, we know not what, gave way on the other side, and we felt a jerk on the rope. It had broken between Brouwer and Mr. Pendleton. His lordship was on the edge of the divide. Presently there was another jerk. Mr. Pendleton went down, and his lordship fell back, I catching him in my arms."

"But the others!" exclaimed the excited listeners. "How far did they fall? Were they killed?"

"That we don't know," replied the guide. "It was snowing, and we could not see a dozen yards. We concluded to return for ropes, go back and as soon as it is light tomorrow make an investigation. They have provisions and flasks of liquor, and if they are not killed we may save them."

At this moment the landlord took up the end of the rope that had been severed between Boyingham and Pendleton and scrutinized it. Presently he dropped it and went away.

"Why did you examine that rope?" asked a guest.

"To see if it had been broken."

"Well?"

"It was broken. The end was frayed."

About midnight a party, provided with such paraphernalia as were necessary to their purpose, made ready to start in quest of the missing guide and Pendleton. Lord Boyingham declared that there was no use in attempting to reach them; that he had looked down into a crevasse several hundred feet deep, into which he was sure they had fallen. He declined to go back with the party, making an excuse that he had been so "cut up" by the accident and the loss of the two men that he would be of no use in the rescue. Since no one was wanted in the party who could not assist it was deemed best for him to remain in the hotel.

The party started about 1 o'clock. They could travel over a known path till nearly dawn, which would bring them near the scene of the accident as soon as it was light enough to see to what depths the men had fallen. Fortunately the weather had changed, and shortly after 2 o'clock a gray streak appeared in the cloudless east. The party consisted of a Mr. Bowers, an American stopping at the hotel where the excursionists had put up, two porters and Dyckman leading the way.

About half past 2 they reached the ridge where the accident had occurred, and Bowers, taking the advance, climbed it, sitting on it with a leg on either side. Looking down, he saw that the tourists must have fallen into a gap, but how deep it was he could not tell. The rest of the party, being informed of what he was about to do, all advanced, he descending to an icy ledge not far below. The men in falling must have struck this ledge and, unable to stop themselves, had slid into the gap.

When all had crossed the last man threw the coils of rope over to them, and Bowers volunteered to be lowered to discover whether the men could be found and whether they were dead or alive. A rope was placed around his body, and, a code of signals having been arranged, he was let down. When he had gone some forty feet, the rope slackening, it was evident that he had struck bottom. He was then heard to call, and a faint response came up. He signaled to be raised and, reaching the party, said that the gap was filled with soft snow; that he had called and received an answer. When being raised he looked for the owner of the voice and saw him some fifty feet away. The point from which he had been lowered being altered to meet the new conditions, he went down again with another rope. Presently a signal was given on each of these ropes, and Bowers and Brouwer were both hauled up. Brouwer was well nigh gone, but was able to point out where Pendleton could be found, the two having conversed after their fall.

Bowers again went down with an extra rope and struck Pendleton lying apparently unconscious, though if Bowers had not been immediately over him he would not have seen him, so deeply buried was he in the snow. Then Bowers and Pendleton were both drawn up, Pendleton showing no sign of life. But glass being placed over his mouth showed moisture, and the party, going to work on him with a will, pouring down liquor at the same time, finally revived him.

Neither of the men had been injured by their fall into the snow. They were on the eve of perishing by cold. As soon as they were able to proceed the party descended to Scheidig.

Great was the rejoicing at the hotel when the two men who had been considered lost appeared walking with their rescuers down the mountain. When they came up to the porch it was crowded with people cheering and waving to them. Then some one asked, "Where's Lord Boyingham?" An attendant replied: "His lordship went down to Interlaken an hour ago. He received a telegram calling him away."

The meeting between Pendleton and Delia Denton was far different from their parting. The title that had tempted her had shriveled since it must be taken with a man who was at once dishonorable and a coward. Not only that, but the accident had revealed to her her own heart. The belief that Pendleton had been killed gave her a shock that surprised her. One glance from Pendleton at the woman he loved told him that he had won.

When something of the excitement had subsided the landlord asked Pendleton to come into a private room. The rope with which the climber had started the day before was still about his waist. The landlord took up the end and, looking at it, threw it from him.

"What is it?" asked Pendleton.

"It was cut," was the reply in a scathing tone. "The dog feared you would drag him over and cut you off. Before his return he frayed the edge by rubbing it between stones."

Pendleton was thunderstruck. The landlord continued:

"His lordship wrote a telegram to himself stating that his mother was dying. He did it for an excuse to get away and left before your return. He dared not face your end of the rope."

"Keep it to yourself," said Pendleton after a moment's thought.

Pendleton kept the secret till a few years later he heard the Britisher was trying again to marry an American fortune, when he sent his lordship an order to keep off, an order that was speedily obeyed.

Delia Denton did not know the secret till she had been Mrs. Pendleton several years.

Our First Locomotives.

The first locomotives in the United States were brought over from England by Horatio Allen of New York in the fall of 1829 or the spring of 1830, and one of them was set up on the Delaware and Hudson railroad at Carbondale, Pa., but, being found too heavy for the track, its use was abandoned. The first locomotive constructed in this country was built by the West Point foundry at New York in 1830 for the South Carolina railroad and named the Phoenix. A second engine was built the same year by the same establishment and for the same road and named the West Point. In the spring of 1831 a third engine was built by the same establishment for the Mohawk & Hudson railroad from Albany to Schenectady and called the De Witt Clinton. This was the first locomotive run in the state of New York. The first Stephenson locomotive ever imported into this country was the Robert Fulton. This engine was brought out in the summer of 1831 for the Mohawk & Hudson railroad. It was subsequently rebuilt and named the John Bull.

The Eaglet's First Flight.

H. B. Macpherson gives a dramatic account of the first flight of an eaglet whose life from babyhood he had watched. One day he ventured to the edge of the cliff containing his cradle and looked about. Suddenly his mother swung past on silent wings and "tried to tempt him from his fastness." But he was unwilling or afraid. Again the mother hovered round, and a wild, weird cry rang through the glen. "For the first time I had heard the yelp of the adult eagle, the voice of the queen of birds calling to her young. The eaglet cheeped continuously until he flapped to the very edge of the abyss, listening to her call. And now he, too, changed his cry; his voice seemed to break, and the adult yell burst from his throat. The eagles called to each other, yelp answering yelp. The young eagle gazed round him, spread out his giant wings and vanished forever from my sight among the ledges below. The eaglet had left the nest and had flown."

Baboons and Water.

In Captain Drayson's "Sporting Scenes Among the Kaffirs" we find the following: "Well," said Kemp, "when I go into a country where there is not much water I always take my baboon." "You don't drink him, do you?" "No, but I make him show me water." "How do you do that?" "In this way: When water gets scarce I give the Bavian none. If he does not seem thirsty I rub a little salt on his tongue. I then take him out with a long string or chain. At first it was difficult to make him understand what was wanted, for he always wished to go back to the wagons. Now, however, he is well trained. When I get him out [illegible] along a bit, scratches himself, shows his teeth at me, takes a smell up wind, looks all round, picks up a bit of grass, smells or eats it, stands up for another sniff, canters on, and so on. Wherever the nearest water is there he is sure to go."

The Tyrant In the Field.

There have been few commanders so tyrannous as Lopez, the dictator of Paraguay, when, in the war of 1865-70, it fought single handed the neighboring countries of Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay. Lopez, says Mr. W. H. Koebel in his "Argentina," was wont to carry the theory of victory or death to an uncomfortable point. "Officers were executed for mere remarks whose tone fell beneath the standard of confidence that Lopez had set up for himself. One, for instance, was shot for having announced in the course of his duty that the enemy was strongly intrenched! Another met his end on account of an unguarded speech to the effect that the Paraguayan army was accustomed to count the enemy's losses and forget its own."

A Frank Reply.

A kind local lady went to Columbus to distribute helpful literature to the convicts in the penitentiary.

"What are you in for, my poor fellow?" she inquired of the first prisoner she saw.

"Because I can't get out," he answered. Then she moved on to the next cell.—Toledo Blade.

Catarrh of the Lungs Threatened Her Life

Miss Ninette Porter, Braintree, Vermont, writes: "I have been cured by Peruna.

"I had several hemorrhages of the lungs. The doctors did not help me much and would never have cured me.

"I saw a testimonial in a Peruna almanac of a case similar to mine, and I commenced using it.

"I was not able to wait on myself when I began using it. I gained very slowly at first, but I could see that it was helping me.

"After I had taken it a while I commenced to raise up a stringy, sticky substance from my lungs. This grew less and less in quantity as I continued the treatment.

"I grew more fleshy than I had been for a long time, and now I call myself well."

Home From Cuba.

The Centre Hall Reporter says that Station Agent W. Frank Bradford returned from his trip through the southern states and to Cuba. The trip was a most delightful one, and he and his chum, W. S. Musser, of Columbia, enjoyed it to its fullest extent. He saw some beautiful summer resorts, plucked oranges from the trees in Florida, but yet when the question was put to him whether he would prefer the south to his old home, he unhesitatingly replied "no." The orange grower, Mr. Bradford said, is obliged to do much work—fertilize, spray and cultivate—before his crop is ready. Like in the north, the man who makes the most money is not an idler.

Keeping Good Men in Public Life.

Senator Galinger, of New Hampshire, was accorded a banquet by the citizens of Washington, D. C., a few days ago in honor of his good work as chairman of the committee on the District of Columbia. President Taft was there and made a speech. He declared earnestly in favor of keeping strong men in public life. He said:

"The truth is, those of us who live in Washington for any time realize how much the people lose in effective legislation by rotation in office of their Senators and Representatives. Experience is as essential to make a good legislator as it is to make a good doctor or a good lawyer, and you know as well as I do that the men who come here without experience, selected on the theory of rotation for several years, count only as votes and not as men who lead in legislation or contribute in any way to its excellence. Therefore, it is that when we get a good man in the Senate or the House we all ought to pray that he shall stay there."

Depew Declares for Taft.

When the national republican convention meets in 1912 there will be but one name before it, William Howard Taft, predicted Chauncey M. Depew, former senator from New York, to the Republican club Friday night, in his first public utterance since the election of his successor.

"I believe," he continued, "that as President Taft's measures are better understood and his unselfish patriotism and devotion to the public service better known among the people he will grow in popular favor. He is one of the most misunderstood of our presidents.

"His life has been judicial and never one of political strife and so he looks upon questions as a judge and not from the viewpoint of a politician. It never occurs to him what may be the effect of a measure upon his political fortunes."

Mr. Depew gave what he termed an accounting of his stewardship during his twelve years at Washington. Incidentally he said that he tried insurgency in life, "and got over it immediately."

A BIG CHURCH PROJECT

Eminent Business Men Meet in Philadelphia to Devise Plans.

Through the courtesy of Clement H. Congdon, of the Philadelphia News Service, we are able to give our readers an accurate account of a conference held at the Union League, Philadelphia, on Thursday, last, with reference to the building of the proposed Presbyterian Church at Pennsylvania State College, to which "The Republican" referred in a recent issue. It was of such an educational character, and of national significance as to draw together a score of prominent bankers, philanthropists and educators. Alba B. Johnson was the host at luncheon. The invitations read "to meet Edwin E. Sparks, president of State College"

Rev. Dr. Richard C. Hughes, of Madison, Wis., a secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Education, outlined the work of the Board in connection with the development of religious education in State-aided institutions of higher education and emphasized the point that there are now 108,000 students attending such State-aided schools and colleges of higher education who are directly affected by the lack of proper and adequate facilities for continuing their church relations and advancing in religious education.

S. S. Chapman, counsel for the Board of Education, discussed the legal and financial status of the arrangement entered into by the Synod, the State College Presbyterian Church and the Board of Education, in which the three parties are bound to raise $75,000 for the erection and endowment of the proposed church at State College which is to be especially charged with the responsibility of caring for the 400 sons of Presbyterian parents in the college there. The present church seats less than 200 and the residents of State College other than students who attend this church tax its utmost capacity, leaving no place of worship for the 400 Presbyterian students who would like to attend.

William R. Nicholson, president of the Land Title and Trust Company, considered the financial aspect of the case from the layman's viewpoint, which covered the vastly important economic problem involved in the proper moral and religious training of college students. He spoke of the effect of these young men on the commerce and trade of the country and the importance of starting them in the groove of right thinking and right living.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Wilson Cochran, who, with Dr. Hughes, has undertaken the work of raising this particular fund, and who is expected to establish similar churches in all towns having State-aided institutions of higher education throughout the United States, explained at some length the peculiar necessities of State College and brought out the fact that as the great majority of all the young men graduated from this institution go directly to small communities to spend their lives as educated, scientific farmers, they exert for all time a period influence upon hundreds of small settlements where, as the only scientific farmers in the neighborhood, they are constantly consulted by less skilled men of the soil, who come to follow their examples in living as well as in farming.

President Sparks was then introduced by Mr. Johnson, and said: "The modern college education acknowledges a threefold obligation: It must train the mind, the body, and the spirit. The omission of one or the undue emphasis of another destroys the proportions of full preparation for life. For the mental training, text-books, teachers, laboratories and shops are provided; for the physical training, gymnasium, athletic fields and games are maintained; for the spiritual development, sermons, churches and religious organizations are at hand.

"While all institutions of higher learning recognize these objectives, the degree in which they are supplied must vary with the equipment and surroundings. It also varies according to the definition of education by those charged with the university control. The sectarian institutions of early days placed the training of the soul on a par with the training of the mind, but neglected to provide for the training of the body. The later non-sectarian institutions provided for the mind and, through athletics, the body; but they paid little attention officially to the spirit. The industrial education for which these State institutions were founded was based upon materialism and caused the student to neglect if not to despise the cultural aspects of life. The aesthetic and the religious are alike embodied in the cultural. How to provide a religious training in the non-sectarian of interdenominational institutions has been the subject of extended and profound thought on the part of many men and is the cause of this assembly today.

"The State institution is a natural field for the Christian Associations. They supply the affiliations of creed and worship which the church supplies in sectarian colleges. A striking illustration of this fact is found in the Pennsylvania State College, which has the largest Young Men's Christian Association of any college in the world. Its situation, as well as its interdenominationalism, conduces to this end. Lying adjacent to a small village, remote from a city, all its students dwelling within a radius of one mile, the college is able to bring its constituents together speedily and easily. It is no uncommon thing to have an attendance of 600 to 800 at an evening meeting. "Dad" Elliott attracted audiences night after night numbering from 1000 to 1200.

"Nor is the Association satisfied with receiving good things. Its members maintain several Sunday schools in neighboring country school houses. A large Sunday meeting is held during the pleasant months in the saw mill of a lumber camp not far distant. A night school has been inaugurated for the village boys and a number of the members spend their summer vacations in city settlements and playground work. The Woman's Association, though smaller, is equally active.

"This spiritual activity, fostered and largely supported by the college authorities, disproves the statement sometimes heard that the State colleges are Godless colleges. It is true that they are barred from imparting doctrinal instruction or fostering any particular creed; but there is a great thesis of clean living, of pure thinking and of service to man on which all denominations may meet. The Sunday morning meetings at State College have been addressed this year by ministers and laymen of the Baptist, Catholic, Congregational, Dutch Reformed, Episcopal, Friend, Jewish, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian and Reformed faiths.

"Now the Christian Associations, however strong and efficient, and the college preaching, however convincing and helpful, do not supply all that is needed to the young men or women for their spiritual development. The transition from preparatory school to college is the most violent and dangerous of any step in a student's career. He breaks his home ties; he loses for the first time direct parental control; he vastly enlarges his acquaintances, and he is allowed to choose his friends from a wider variety of men than he has at home. Where he formerly prepared his tasks under the eye of a teacher or his parents, he is now free to prepare or neglect them at will. He faces for the first time the great sciences and their apparent contradiction of the simple religious facts which he has been taught. He has reached the first by-ways of the labyrinth which makes the thinking man a free moral agent. He needs every agency which will enable him to steady himself, to find himself, to hold on to the accepted faith of his parents until he can work out a faith for himself.

"At this critical time of the student's life he needs the help of his church. Neither the college administration nor the Christian Association can take its place. This is the underlying thought of the present movement among the churches to care for their own at the State institutions. Some denominations, notably the Presbyterians, have appointed college church agents to look after students of their faith in the State colleges and universities. Some college churches have been built and others are contemplated. College preachers are maintained in several institutions situated in large cities where churches are distantly located.

"The church problem at State College is more simple. The village which has grown up about the campus contains a population of 1500, having nearly doubled during the past ten years. The total enrollment of students this year reaches 1800. Distances are short and it is possible for one church building if sufficiently commodious to accommodate villagers, faculty and students. It is also possible for one minister to serve all if he be wisely chosen. This has been done by several denominations.

"The Methodists have under construction a commodious church building which will have a seating capacity of 900 and contains many rooms for Bible classes and also for social activities. It is to be furnished with a large organ which will supply a need in the student body. The Lutherans have recently built a large church which accommodates both students and villagers of that faith. The Episcopalians have appointed a college Chaplain, have purchased a site and are now collecting a fund for building. The Roman Catholic students maintain a club, have a priest assigned to them and will erect a church during the coming summer through donations made by the Knights of Columbus. The Reformed Church maintains a congregation although as yet without a permanent pastor. The preachers assigned to the care of these college churches are young men, scholarly, and of a temperament likely to appeal to students. They are frequently called upon for lectures, to conduct chapel service, and to assume other relations of helpfulness to the college.

"Of all the denominations represented among the student body, the Presbyterians are usually the largest in numbers, although at times the Methodists rival them. The Presbyterian congregation is one of the oldest in the village, has a large representation in the faculty, but its building has long since ceased to accommodate its congregation. Its membership aside from the students exhausts the seating capacity of the little building. The preacher, the Rev. Samuel Martin, a Princeton graduate, is most active and successful in his work among the students; but there is little encouragement in holding a young man or woman to the faith of his fathers when there are no church accommodations. There is no opportunity of approaching the student on the social side or of giving him a church home among strangers. There is no music to attract him and no accommodation for Bible classes. At a time when he needs most his church, he fails to find it. These are conditions facing Presbyterianism at the Pennsylvania State College, which persuaded me to accept your kind invitation to describe them to you and to encourage in every possible way the project of erecting a building suitable to the needs of the community and of endowing it to relieve the students from their share of its maintenance. A large sum is necessary since the college attendance is increasing about 200 each year. Next year there will be 2000 students and Presbyterianism must be prepared to care for its own"

The following committee was named to co-operate with Dr. Cochran and Dr. Hughes in the work of raising the money required for the State College Church: Alba B. Johnson, J. Milton Colton, Thomas W. Synnott, Craig N. Liggitt, Harold Peirce and William H. Nicholson.

The Presbyterians have purchased the properties of John Rager and Mrs. Weibly, on West Beaver avenue, in State College, as a site for the new church. Ground will not be broken, however, for several months.

The committee will meet within the week to draft formal plans for pressing forward the work.

Craige Lippincott a Suicide.

Craige Lippincott, 64 years old, president of the publishing firm of the J. B. Lippincott Company, art patron, clubman and society man of prominence, shot and killed himself in Philadelphia, early Thursday morning.

The statement issued by the publishing house follows:

"During a period of temporary aberration Craige Lippincott, president of the J. B. Lippincott Company, shot and killed himself at his residence, 218 West Rittenhouse Square, early Thursday morning. The business of the publishing house will not be affected by Mr. Lippincott's death."

The statement made by Coroner Ford, after he had received the report of his investigations physician and Deputy George McKeever, was:

"Craige Lippincott killed himself with a 32-caliber revolver. It was a new pistol, evidently purchased especially for the deed. Only one shell had ever been discharged from it, and that was the shell which killed Mr. Lippincott. He shot himself while lying in bed. The powder marks show that the revolver must have been held at very close range to the man's temple."

The tragedy was discovered by Oscar Stewart, the negro valet of Mr. Lippincott, who went to his room at 8.10 o'clock that morning to shave him.

Mr. Lippincott occupied a separate apartment at the front of the house overlooking Rittenhouse square. His room was separated from that of his wife by a bathroom. Neither Mrs. Lippincott nor any of the household heard the report of the shot. The bullet entered Mr. Lippincott's right temple killing him instantly.

Woman Walked 1175 Miles.

After walking from Trenton, N. J., to Tampa, Fla., Miss Dora Harrison, of 215 Covert street, Brooklyn, stepped off the Atlantic Coast Express at the Pennsylvania station in New York the other day, brown as a nut, eyes as clear as a child's and with a dancing light in them—having won a wager of $1000 and reduced her weight from 172 to 110.

"How are your feet?" she was asked.

"Sound and firm. I walked in high hunter's shoes, and used plenty of salt and water."

From Trenton, N. J., to Tampa, Fla., is 1175 miles. This she accomplished between January 2 and March 9, or 66 days, averaging nearly 18 miles a day.

HOW IT FEELS TO BE SHOT

Gen. Nelson A. Miles' Experience to be Wounded in Battle.

General Nelson A. Miles, who is telling readers of the Cosmopolitan of his "Biggest Days of Battle," says that he has often been asked how it feels to be wounded on the field of battle. His answer is to relate an experience at Chancellorsville Before this, at Fair Oaks and at Fredericksburg, he had received slight flesh wounds, which disabled him but a short time. But at Chancellorsville he was riding down the line, as he tells the story, when "one of the enemy's bullets struck, with great force, my metallic belt-plate.

"This caused a slight deviation as it entered the body. The result was an instant of deathly, sickening sensation; my sword dropt from my right hand; my scabbard and belt dropt to the left, I was completely paralyzed below the waist. My horse seemed to realize what had occured; he stopt, turned, and walked slowly back, I holding on to the pommel of the saddle with my hands. We soon reached a group of soldiers who took me off, and, placing me in a blanket, carried me to the Chancellorsville House. Here I remained until the house was struck by a bursting shell and set on fire. I was then taken out and carried five miles on a stretcher, rested in the woods that night, and the next day was carried in an ambulance over a rough corduroy road twelve miles to a field hospital. Thence I was sent to Washington, where my brother met me and carried me to my home in Massachusetts. Two weeks afterwards I was able to move slightly the toes of my right foot, and the doctors concluded the bullet must be somewhere in the left side. A consultation was held, and after a thorough examination it was found that the ball had crushed through the hipbone and lodged down in the strong muscles of the leg. The bullet and bones were removed, and after several weeks of convalescence I was able to return to the field."

Too Young to Ride.

A ne'er-do-well man, wife and five-year-old son settled in the yellow pine section of Spokane county, Washington. A more prosperous neighbor presented the man with a rooster and two hens. With this start the man concluded that he would go back into the stock business, and explained the circumstances as follows, to his wife: "You see, the hens will lay eggs, we will save and set the eggs and raise more chickens; when we get enough chickens on hand to have plenty of eggs and chickens to market we will save enough money to buy a mare. From her we will raise a colt—" At this point the boy, who had been attentively listening, clapped his hands and cried out in glee: "Oh! Papa! I am going to ride the colt!" The man bent forward and slapped the boy's jaw and said: "Get off the colt's back! It's too young to ride!"

Nothing Doing.

The Huntingdon New Era says that Huntingdon's baseball prospects for this summer appear about the shade of a tub of water after a whole bottle of bluing has been spilled into it. There is too much enthusiasm. There was so much enthusiasm over the announcement of a meeting in the Huntingdon club rooms on Thursday night, last, that about five men were present to talk business. The result was that nothing was done, no manager selected, no team arranged, no opening date set, "no nothing." From present appearances, it looks as though the City League will be compelled to furnish the sport for the town this summer.

Liquid Cures Eczema Where Salves Fail.

In regard to skin diseases, medical authorities are now agreed on this:

Don't imprison the disease germs in your skin by the use of greasy salves, and thus encourage them to multiply. A true cure of all eczematous diseases can be brought about only by using the healing agents in the form of a liquid.

WASH THE GERMES OUT.

A simple wash: A compound of Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol, and other ingredients as combined in the D. D. D. Prescription. This penetrates to the disease germs and destroys them, then soothes and heals the skin as nothing else has ever done.

A 25 cents trial bottle will start the cure and give you instant relief.

Only a Tree.

If there were only one tree in all the world, what would be its commercial value, not to speak of its aesthetic worth? The millions of Rockefeller and Carnegie added to the billions in the Bank of England could not buy that tree.

Suppose you owned it. What would you do with it?

Would you build a high wall around it, so high as to shut off outside view even of the top-most leafage, and charge tourists, who, of course, would come from all parts of the world in flocks and droves and herds, $100 a peep? Would you gather the annual crop of leaves and sell them at $25 a leaf? Would you yank off the shedding bark and sell bark souvenirs of the only tree at $10 a square inch? Would you charge $500 for the privilege of climbing your tree?

Or would you cultivate a magnificent lawn around the only tree, put plenty of benches under its shade and invite the people of the world to come and sit and have a shade with you?

This is just a hypothetical question in the case of brotherhood versus selfishness. How would you answer it?

If you answer it unselfishly then go and plant another tree.

"Doan's Ointment cured me of eczema that had annoyed me a long time. The cure was permanent."—Hon. S. W. Matthews, Commissioner Labor Statistics, Augusta, Me.

All on Account of a Baby.

You often have heard that home is not much of a home until after a baby enters it, when all becomes life and sunshine, and from day to day new and strong attachments are formed for the little, prattling babe. Not only is it so with reference to the parents but the grandparents soon relish a fondness for the child that is equal to that of the parents.

An interesting and also amusing instance of this kind has come to our notice which we cannot refrain from giving a little notice. About two years ago Russel Jury, one of the faithful employes of S. H. Williams, was married to Agnes Long, an expert pianist, whose inspiring and fascinating music was often heard at the Scenic. After the nuptial vows had been taken Russel and his bride went to live with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Jury, on East High Street. In the course of events a bright little boy came to add cheer and comfort to this newly wedded couple. On the part of the grandparents, as well as the parents, there developed a devotion and fondness for the child to such an extent that "Jake" loved it as if it were his own.

The young couple finally decided they would go to housekeeping, and with this in view they rented a house, on Bishop Street, from A. C. Mingle. After they had furnished it and it was ready for occupancy they found that they were unable to take the baby, Mr. and Mrs. Jury, both of whom have warm and kind hearts, insisting that the baby boy could not leave. So strong were their protestations that Mr. and Mrs. Russel Jury were compelled to abandon the idea of going to live by themselves. The furniture was therefore taken out of the house and the key returned to Mr. Mingle. Since that time Russel has rented two other houses and each time with the same result. The first thing you know they will have to get uncle Sam Pennypacker's mounted police up here and it would be doubtful whether they could get the boy if "Jake" took a notion to keep him.

Gramley, of Rebersburg, is president of the association.

A Busy Place.

One of the busiest places in Bellefonte just now is S. D. Ray's drawer factory. The other day a representative of "The Republican" passed through it, and on every table was found high stacks of finished and unfished men's drawers. In fact, it seems marvelous what a large amount of work is being done in this place of business. In a month Mr. Ray's payroll amounts to quite a large sum of money. The proprietor informed us that he has orders on hand for 30,000 pairs of drawers, which will run him about two months, but on account of the tarif aggitation and reduction of employes on our railroads and the curtailing of business in our mills and factories Mr. Ray expects his orders to be somewhat reduced for the next couple of months. In this factory as high as fifty young ladies are employed, who are earning good wages. These are the girls who help along the milliners, shoe dealers and dressmakers.

Commencement at Blanchard.

The commencement exercises of the Liberty district High School of Blanchard, were held on Thursday evening of last week. The following were graduated: Dean Goodwine, Lewis Bolopue, Garland Patterson, Lulu Bechdel, Margaret Heverly, Zelinda Sulenberger and Beulah Belle Holter.

Enoch Hastings Dead.

Enoch Hastings passed away shortly after the noon hour on Friday at his home in Beech Creek. While it was generally known that Mr. Hastings had a hard battle to fight with disease, yet few realized that the end was so near, and consequently his death came as a surprise and a shock to the community at large, says the Lock Haven "Express."

It was noticed that Mr. Hastings' health began to fail early last fall and during the winter months he lost considerable flesh and looked badly. About a month ago his foot was injured and blood poisoning developed several days afterward, necessitating the amputation of the foot above the ankle, the operation being performed in the Lock Haven hospital, to which institution he was removed. The operation was regarded as successful and the leg began to heal, but a debilitated condition due to diabetes caused serious complications, the heart action became deranged, and it was evident that his age made his ultimate recovery very doubtful. He was taken home from the hospital Monday and while he stood the trip apparently well, yet Wednesday morning a change for the worse was very noticeable and from that time his decline was rapid. His return from the hospital was prompted by his intense desire to get to his own home. Enoch H. Hastings was born February 26, 1847, 64 years ago, at Boalsburg, Centre county, the son of Daniel Hastings and Mary Anne Gray, his wife. His parents are dead, his mother dying a few years ago. A brother, George Hastings, of Bellefonte, along survives of this family. The deceased was united in marriage to Katherine Brown in February of 1868. Besides his widow, one daughter, Miss Zoe L. Hastings, survives. Mrs. Blaine Loveland, a daughter, died last November.

Mr. Hastings was held in high regard and esteem. He was a man of commanding appearance, always the dignified gentleman, retiring in disposition. He was a kind husband an affectionate father, deeply loving his home where he always could be found when not at his place of business. He was a man of good character and splendid reputation, honest and upright. From 1890 to 1893, during the administration of President Harrison, he was postmaster of the local office. After retiring from the postoffice he engaged in the mercantile business and has ever since conducted such business.

Funeral services were held at the house at 9 o'clock Monday morning, conducted by Rev. A. D. Bateman, of Mill Hall, pastor of the Presbyterian church. At 11 o'clock the remains were taken to Muncy, Pa., for interment.

Death at Beech Creek.

A pioneer resident of Beech Creek passed peacefully away into the great beyond when Mrs. Sarah Hall died at 6.30 o'clock last Saturday morning after an illness of a few days of pneumonia. Mrs. Hall lived in the Hall homestead, and with her lived Mr. and Mrs. Edwin S. Mobley. During her brief illness she suffered very little and the tender care of three of her daughters gave her every attention. Her mind was clear and she knew those about her until half an hour before she slept calmly away.

Sarah McCloskey was born the daughter of Abner McCloskey and wife at Hyner run on September 22, 1824, being past 86 years of age when she died. At the age of 18 years she was married to Samuel Hall, who likewise was reared in the vicintiy of Hyner run, and they soon after their marriage moved to Beech Creek township. Mr. Hall died in September, 1885. His wife was a resident of that community for 68 years. She was the last surviving member of her immediate family, her parents having been among the early settlers of the West Branch valley. She was a kind hearted woman, always an affectionate and indulvent mother, and thoroughly a Christian woman, having identified herself with the Methodist church more than half a century ago.

Mrs. Hall was the mother of five daughters and three sons, all of whom are living except Dr. B. S. Hall, who died as a practicing physician of Flemington several years ago. The surviving children are: Nancy E., wife of Jacob A. Bitner, of Lock Haven; Malissa, widow of the late William Shultz, of Lakehurst, N. J.; Thersia I., wife of James I. McClure, Bellefonte; Amelia R., wife of Harry S. Berryhill, of Tacoma, Wash.; Sarah A., wife of Edwin S. Mobley, this borough; Jesse S. Hall, of this borough, and Allison A. Hall, of Lock Haven. Besides these children, 24 grandchildren survive and 10 great grandchildren.

Funeral Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the house. Interment in Fearon's cemetery.—Lock Haven Express.

To the third union the following children were born and survive: Thomas and William Hazzard and Mrs. Laura Brown of Curtin, and James I. and Miss Hannah Hazzard, of Philipsburg.

Died In Kansas.

Recently John Relph died at his home in Independence, Kansas, at the age of about 64 years. Mr Relph was a son of John Relph, Sr., and was born near Bellefonte. The senior Relph came from England, and when a mere boy located at Roopsburg, and was associated with David Pruner in the brewery and mercantile business. His mother was Miss Jane Parker.

He was a man who had many reverses in life. He was the senior partner of the Independence Milling Company, whose plant which was just a new one, was completely destroyed by fire last fall, and two years previous a mill owned by him at Peru, Kansas, also burned. Last October he was thrown from a carriage and was seriously injured, and it was at that time that organic heart trouble developed which unexpectedly caused his death.

When a young man, Mr. Relph left Bellefonte and located in the west, marrying Mary E. Myers. He first engaged in farming near Witchita, Kansas, but later went to Waynoka, Oklahoma, where he conducted a hardware store, and then again returned to Kansas, building the mills as indicated above.

Joseph Relph, of Beloit, Wisconsin, is the only surviving full brother, and Mrs. Katherine Rice, of Reedsville, who also survives is a full sister. Daniel Reynolds, of Reedsville, and Israel Reynolds, of Beloit, Wisconsin, are half brothers, and Mrs. Edward B. Thompson, of Altoona, is a half sister of the deceased. He is also survived by a wife and seven children.

Charles McClay Gates.

Charles McClay Gates, ex-assessor, of Altoona, died at his residence, in that city, at 5.10 o'clock Saturday morning, after an illness of several months, caused by a complication of diseases. He was the son of Jacob and Mary Gates and was born at Martha Furnace, Centre county, October 1, 1844. He spent his early boyhood there and removed to Duncansville, where he was engaged in the mercantile business for a time. Deceased was a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in 1861 in Company C, Seventy-sixth regiment, Keystone Zouaves. He served his country with honor during the war, participating in many important engagements. Mr. Gates was twice married. His first wife, who was Miss Rebecca Miller, of Hollidaysburg, died in 1876. His second wife was Miss Amanda Gibboney, of Duncansville, who married him on June 24, 1879. She survives with the one daughter by the first wife, Miss Millie Irene, at home. Two sisters also are living, Mrs. Emeline Kistler, of Johnstown, and Mrs. Elizabeth Shade, of Edgewood, Ill. He was a member of the First Lutheran church and the funeral services were conducted on Wednesday afternoon.

Death at Houserville.

Samuel Hazel, a well known resident of Centre County, died early yesterday morning at his late home, near Houserville. He had been ill for some time from tuberculosis. For many years he delivered wool for the old Houserville Woolen Mills and had a wide acquaintance in the County. He was twice married and is survived by his second wife and two daughters: Mrs. Orrie Haupt and Mrs. John Breon, both of near Houserville. He is also survived by several brothers: Adam Hazel, of Axe Mann; Frank, of Bellefonte, and Nathaniel and Cornelius, of Rebersburg. Deceased was born at Rebersburg 62 years ago. He was a member of the Bellefonte Lodge, I. O. O. F., and for many years was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Interment will be made tomorrow at Shiloh.

Found Dead Near Lewistown.

John Slagle, 50 years old, a lifelong resident of Lewistown, was found dead, lying along the towpath of the old Pennsylvania canal, west of that place, at noon on Sunday. Slagle had been employed as a tire borer in the tire mills of the Standard Steel works for the past quarter of a century and it is said there never was a better workman. He leaves, a wife, and two daughters, both at home.

Death at Boalsburg.

Died, April 5, at Boalsburg, Benjamin B. Stem, aged 60 years, 9 months and 18 days. He has been in feeble health for some time, but was only seriously ill a short time, dying rather suddenly from heart failure. Funeral services were held at the home by Rev. S. C. Stover Interment was made in the Boalsburg cemetery.

Tom Johnson Dead.

Tom L. Johnson, twice congressman from the Twenty-first, Ohio district, four times mayor of Cleveland, champion of three-cent street railroad fares and prominent advocate of the single tax theories of the late Henry George, died in his apartments, at Cleveland, Ohio, on Monday.

William Mayes, of Bellefonte, who spent a week very pleasantly among friends at Lemont, returned home on Tuesday.

Cyrus W. Hunter, of Stormstown, was a Bellefonte visitor on Saturday. Cy said everything up his way was looking first class.

Wednesday afternoon George B. Gamble left Bellefonte for Reading. He was accompanied as far as Jersey Shore by Mrs. Gamble.

Anna Elizabeth Jodon, the 22 month old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jodon, of Coleville, died Thursday afternoon from the grip.

Rev. C. W. Winey left on Wednesday for Greensburg where he will take part in special services connected with the U. B. church at that place.

J. L. Holter, one of Howard's well known citizens, was a Bellefonte visitor on Tuesday and while in town called at "The Republican" office.

On Wednesday morning Squire Musser united in marriage George A. Anderson, of Bellefonte, and Mrs. Louise Bowman, of Yatesboro, Forest county.

Dr. and Mrs. T. R. Hayes, who have been spending the winter in the south, and more recently have been occupying their Atlantic City cottage, will return to Bellefonte tomorrow for the summer.

William Hunter, one of the best and oldest residents of Axe Mann, was a pleasing caller at this office on Tuesday. Before leaving he had the name of his son, Boyd, placed on our list for a year.

W. H. Twigg, wife and daughter, of Philipsburg, were pleasant visitors in Bellefonte on Wednesday Mr. Twigg is the general proprietor of the Palace bakery, in that place, and is getting along nicely.

Thomas A. Shoemaker took 11,000 car loads of slag from the Bellefonte Furnace yard. This gave $11,000 to the Bellefonte Furnace Co. and the same amount to the Bellefonte Central Railroad Co.

R. Brandman, the Bellefonte merchant, proprieter of "Workmen's Bargain Store," has a new clerk. The little fellow saw daylight on Saturday, and both he and his mother are getting along nicely.

Wednesday at 12 o'clock the students of the Bellefonte Academy laid down their books for an Easter vacation of one week. The majority of them packed up their "duds" and left for their homes to spend the festial season.

Mrs. Hugh N. Crider, on Saturday, last, entertained at a luncheon in honor of Miss Madge Sholly, of Tyrone, whose wedding will take place in the near future. The guests included fifteen girl friends of the bride-to-be from Tyrone.

Calvin Green, of Uniontown, is visiting in Bellefonte this week. He is the gentleman who run a barber shop next to the Adams Express office several years ago and when he wanted to go fishing he would just lock-up his shop for a week or month, according to how the fish were biting.

R. B. Taylor, of Bellefonte, has purchased the sale barn, on East Howard Street, formerally built and owned by Mart Garman. He will use the building for storing his road making machinery. He also purchased the large lot on which the structure stands. On this he intends building several up-to-date houses.

The directors of the Nittany and Bellefonte furnaces met here on Monday at their monthly meeting. No definite action was taken with reference to firing up. The repairs are still going on, which is an indication that they will resume operation as soon as the price of iron advances. Just at present, an average of 200 tons of iron are being shipped daily from the yards here.

A Mr. Higgens was in Bellefonte on Tuesday interviewing Maurice Kelley with reference to starting a broker's office here. He represented Frank H. Spuhler, of Pittsburg, dealer in stocks and bonds. Maurice informed him that he would consider the matter if he would give some substantial guarantee that the traders would be safe in dealing with him. The probabilities are that it will be a go.

A genial and welcome visitor to "The Republican" office yesterday was Squire Vinton Beckwith, of Port Matilda. When a squire calls on a fellow the latter naturally wonders what is going to happen next, but in this case it was a mission entirely satisfactory to us. Squire Beckwith called to advance his subscription to "The Republican" another year and also to subscribe for the Philadelphia daily "Inquirer," thus benefiting by the special rate for the two newsy, interesting papers. Mr. Beckwith is now serving his thirteenth year as a Jusice of the Peace, and has two years remaining of his third term. This fact, alone, is pretty good indication that he is a pretty good squire.

Commencement at Snow Shoe.

The Snow Shoe High School Commencement exercises were held in the M. E. church on last Friday evening under the management of Prof. C. P. Shorts, Principal. The exercises opened at 8 o'clock with an invocation by Rev. Ruch, and music by Deitrick's orchestra, of Bellefonte. Six graduates composed the class of 1911—three boys and three girls, viz. Robt. Budinger, Oscar Shank, Clarence Thompson Mable Uzzell, Elsie Bottorf and Candace Leathers.

"Prepares One for Life."

The wonderful success of the Pennsylvania State Normal School may be attributed chiefly to its faithful fulfillment of a practical ideal. "A school should furnish a thorough training for a life of usefulness, of success, in the highest meaning of the word" that is the idea which governs this institution where nearly a thousand students are enrolled.

Everything taught at Indiana is taught with a purpose; the purpose is to broaden the student, to enlarge his or her ability or mental outlook. In addition to all the customary courses, music and the arts are taught; physical training is given the thoughtful attention its importance deserves; there are business courses for those who intend to enter that field of effort. But in every subject taught the one great purpose guides—"the end of teaching is to prepare one for life."

Indiana has many advantages. The location—in the foothills of the Alleghanies—is ideal for a healthful and studious life. The buildings and equipment are up-to-date in every particular; every comfort of a luxurious home is provided. The buildings are all of stone or brick; they are steam heated, lighted by electricity, and equipped with fire escapes.

The state endowment allows the school to offer the best instruction and the comforts of a home at remarkably low prices. And this state endowment is one of the best investments made by the state, since the good work of such a normal school extends over every county with the influence of hundreds of thoroughly trained teachers graduated each year.

The State Normal's faculty is composed of more than forty trained teachers, Dr. James E. Ement, an educator of national repute, is the principal. Miss Jane E. Leonard, the preceptress, has been a member of the faculty since the opening of the school in 1875.

The Spring term in Indiana opens April 11th.

A Lock Haven exchange says that a quartette of young people, consisting of Ed. Decker at the P. R. R., and Perry Aliers of the C. R. R. of Pa., and the Misses Nora Krape and Pauline Raup took an early drive to Howard, and after partaking of dinner at the Sheldrake House returned home in time to avoid the rain. It is said they had "a dickens" of a time with one of the horses which fell down in the road, near the Dornblazer home, and Ed. and Perry were compelled to "hoof" it all over the country to get a rope and tackle to put the animal on its feet again. The next time they take a trip of that kind they ought to go in a flying machine. On Tuesday Perry accompanied his lady friend from Lamar to Altoona, where a heart-rending parting took place, the young lady continuing her journey to Ohio.

Clair Leathers was a business visitor to the Clinton county seat on Friday last.

The annual commencement of the Howard High school will take place tomorrow evening in the Methodist church. The program appears elsewhere in the paper.

The baccalaureate sermon to the class of 1911 in the Methodist church Sunday evening was especially good. The collection amounted to $4.55 and will be used to help defray the expenses of the class.

The Alumni of the Howard High school met and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Emma Weber; Vice President, Mable Loder; Secretary, Walter Holter; Treasurer, Anna Holter.

Harvey Steele and Arthur Hughes, of Bellefonte, visited friends here Friday and Saturday and had it not been that Mr. Hughes intended going to California on Monday they would have remained here indefinitely as they were much taken with our handsome young ladies.

Harry Wetzel and Arthur Long, of this place, had an experienee near Avis last Saturday which they will not soon forget. The two young men had gone to Lock Haven and in company of their lady friends went to Jersey Shore in Wetzel's automobile. On their return trip to Lock Haven their car ran into a slowly moving train at Avis. It was snowing so fast at the time that Mr. Wetzel did not see the lights on the train, which was the cause of the accident. The auto was damaged almost beyond repair but none of the occupants was injured. They returned to Jersey Shore and, securing another auto, started toward Lock Haven and when in the vicinity of Avis they ran into mud axle deep and the touring car was stalled. With the aid of horses they were gotten out of their perilous position and again returned to Jersey Shore. A third attempt was then made with horses and carriage and this time they succeeded in reaching Lock Haven.

For a stranger to look over the program of the commencement exercises of the High school he might take it for granted that it was a class at Heidelburg. The letters "er" are a sign that some where in the past the ancestors were of German extraction, as Pletcher, Weber, Wagner, Holter, Snyder, Harter, etc. will show. Now look at the program and see how many you can find. Clair Leathers tacked an "s" to his. If Frank Robb ever had "er" to his name we don't blame him for taking it off. We don't know how Gertie Herr got two "r's" but we do know that Gertrude Thomas has "er" in her first name and there is just as much Rhine blood in her veins as in any of the others. We don't know where to class Rev. Taylor, but there is Rev. Faust, then the speaker, Dr. Weber, and the last named minister on the program sounds familiar to one of the German extraction. Well, they all have something to be proud of, for they are among the most thrifty and successful people of our country and now they go out into the world better prepared to fight life's battles and with better chances of success than most of their ancestors had. We might suggest that they adopt as their motto, Die Wacht Am Rhine."

Swallows Teeth and Bridge.

R. E. Wilson, aged 28 years, an employe of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, East Pittsburg, who was taken to the new Homeopathic Hospital, Saturday night, has five false teeth and a portion of the bridge work in his stomach.

While eating supper at his boarding house in Braddock avenue, Braddock, the bridge work broke and the teeth and bridge work were swallowed. They lodged in the esophagus and caused a severe coughing fit. Wilson hurried to the office of Dr. Edward J. Meley in Turtle Creek, and the obstruction was forced into the stomach. Later Wilson went to the hospital.

Mr. Keichline wanted to swear some of the witnesses for the defendant but Squire Musser would not have it that way.

Old Time Railway Travel.

Third class passenger coaches in England used to be coupled on next to the engine. The travelers came in for terrible treatment when any accident occurred. At times the engine was driven tender first, in which case frozen hands could be warmed at the smokestack. The passengers were packed, seventy of them, into a truck eighteen feet in length by seven and a half in width. There was no roof and not, as a rule, proper protection at the sides.

Arbutus Hunters Thwarted.

The lovers of nature who had hoped to roam the woods Sunday and gather trailing arbutus were disappointed by the snow storm of Saturday night, which covered the flowers and made walking undesirable. A large number of people did venture as far as the Sulphur Spring, at Linn & McCoy's, however, finding walking fairly good, as the snow had melted in the roads.

Many spring hats and new suits were driven to cover by the storm, which was a combination of rain and snow.

How's This?

An Altoona couple eloped, taking $500 with them. In four weeks they were found living on raw cabbage. That ought to have a depressing influence on the eloping tendency. Still there are a good many inexperienced young people who think that they could live on just love without even raw cabbage for a filler.

The Double Tragedy

Of President Lincoln and the Man Who Had Saved His Life

By MILLARD MALTBIE

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

There are many stories in the life of Abraham Lincoln. Probably no man ever lived who was connected with more romances. But in them all there is something sad. It was a period of war in which these events of which he was the central figure occurred, and only a very few of the romances extracted from war have happy terminations. No one can look upon the portrait of Abraham Lincoln without seeing there the solemnity of those four years when the boys of '61 to '65 were being mowed down like wheat, when every family in the north and in the south were mourners.

There is one event in the life of President Lincoln which, if certain efforts that were made had been unsuccessful, would have left nonexistent his leadership in the great struggle and he would have gone down in history simply as the man whose election brought it on. True, it would have been adorned with the crown of martyrdom, but at the beginning instead of the end of his career.

This is the story of his escape from that earlier attempt to assasinate him which was a failure:

It was in the spring of 1861, when secession sympathizers were plotting against the lines of communication leading from the national capital, that a man, middle aged, muscular and with a determined though tranquil face, appeared in Perrymansville, Md. He was a Pinkerton detective and had been sent there to discover plots to damage railroad property.

When Mr. Lincoln went to Washington for his first inauguration, having passed through New York, he went southward on the Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio railroads. Allan Pinkerton, chief of a Chicago detective bureau, learned through a master machinist of the latter road that a number of secessionists had bound themselves by an oath to assassinate Mr. Lincoln while journeying to the capital. There was but little time to act, for the president elect was about to leave his home. When the assassination plan was conceived it was not known by the conspirators by what route Mr. Lincoln would go to the capital. They were therefore obliged to arrange for an attack upon him at several different points. The Perrymansville branch of the organization pretended to be a cavalry company. Webster, who, though of a quiet exterior, knew how to sham very deep feeling against the Yankee government, at once enrolled himself in this cavalry company.

But getting into the company was far from getting its plans, and unfortunately there was very little time to discover them. Webster relied on his pretended hatred of the government to secure his initiation into the inner circle. His ruse succeeded. He was invited to go to the house of the captain of the company, but not to say a word about the invitation. In a room every window of which was protected against hearing and seeing from the outside he met men from the central point of the conspiracy, Baltimore, and was received as one of the planners of the work to be done.

Seated about a table, the party discussed different methods of assassinating the president elect. Webster, being a new man and of a reserved disposition, listened to the others, only occasionally pointing out some weak spot in a proposition or suggesting a way to obviate it. Before the conference broke up it had been decided to shoot Mr. Lincoln at the depot as he was passing through Baltimore on the 23d of March.

Webster now had the plans in his possession. Taking himself away from the so called cavalry company he went where he could safely communicate with his chief, Allan Pinkerton. On the night of the 21st of February Pinkerton met Mr. Lincoln at the Continental hotel at Philadelphia and revealed the plot.

The question now arose how, having the plan, to defeat it. A ruse was adopted. Instead of going on to Washington direct, Mr. Lincoln was taken northwest to Harrisburg. But it was no easy job to turn the gaze of millions of people from the most prominent figure in the land with hosts of newspaper correspondents watching his every movement. The telegraph wires leading out of Harrisburg were secretly grounded, thus cutting off that city from the rest of the world.

Mr. Lincoln now being able to travel without news of his passage being telegraphed from every station, a private train was made up at Harrisburg, and the president elect—it is said that he was disguised—was taken back to Philadelphia and at midnight of the 22d instead of the 23d, as had been arranged, was rushed through Baltimore and early the next morning arrived safe in Washington.

This brief statement of the plan to assassinate the president elect and its defeat is essential to the story—a story of Abraham Lincoln as the central figure and Timothy Webster, whose quick work was instrumental in saving him for the great work he was to accomplish. It would have been well had the president kept Webster by him until, his task having been finished, he should return to the less dangerous field of private life. But Webster could not have brooked four years of comparative idleness. Besides, there was a continued need for his services. The only railroad thoroughfare between the northern Atlantic states and the capital was continually threatened. Indeed, there was no safety on any line connecting the capital with the rest of the country. Even dispatches were not safe in transit. The first work done by Webster after foiling the intention of the Baltimore conspirators was to carry some important papers through to the president. Webster found the railroad bridges burned by the secessionists. Taking the route through Havre de Grace, where a long bridge was destroyed, he was rowed across the river and hired a wagon to take him onward. He was obliged to pass through Perrymansville, and the wagon was stopped by the cavalry company in which Webster had enlisted for a spy. He was recognized, but fortunately for him the fact that he had revealed their plot to the government was not known to them.

Webster traveled on in company with an Englishman whose confidence he won, and the man revealed to him that he was bearing dispatches to southern sympathizers in Washington. When the two reached the environs of the capital, Webster, meeting one whom he knew to be a Union man, sent word by him to the picket guard that he wished them to arrest both him and his companion. This was done, but as soon as they were separated Webster was released and went to the White House. There he was at once admitted to Mr. Lincoln and taking off his coat and vest, ripped open the lining and produced the dispatches. They and those found on the Englishman were of vital importance. Possibly the latter were the more important, since they revealed that the president was living in a city where numbers of the enemy's sympathizers were plotting for the capture of the capital.

Webster, though he did not serve Mr. Lincoln personally, accomplished a great work for him as president. The spy played a double game. He would go south as a southern man and enter the service of the government for the purpose of giving them information of the designs of the Federal government. There he pretended to be a Federal spy when he was really a Confederate spy. He was from the first a Pinkerton detective, and when Pinkerton organized the military secret service bureau of the United States government Webster entered that service and worked for the pay he received in it. Ordinarily it is hard to tell which side a spy playing this double game is really working for. But Webster in the beginning saved the life of the president elect and continued to take him important information, while he had only to give the Confederacy information that was untrue or would not avail it.

This being a story of Mr. Lincoln rather than Webster, the many remarkable romances in the life of the latter during his term of service must be passed over without even a catalogue of them. Finally, though suffering from rheumatism, he started south in company with a Miss Lewis, who was in his confidence. The trip was to be his last incursion into the south. Unfortunately he was laid up a long while in Richmond with rheumatism. Miss Lewis nursed him. During this time nothing was heard from him at Washington, and the president and others who knew of his mission became anxious about him. It was determined to send the members of the secret service force south to look for him.

The two men went to Richmond. They learned that Webster was lying ill at a hotel and blundered by going directly to see him without communicating with him. In his room they found a Confederate and were rash enough to hand him a letter from Allan Pinkerton which, they said, came from a friend of his in Baltimore. They came again and unfortunately met an officer from the provost marshal's office. This meeting led to their examination. They were identified by a person who knew them, and all was lost.

When the news came to General McClellan's headquarters that the two men had been arrested as spies and had implicated Webster, Allan Pinkerton hurried to Washington to see Mr. Lincoln and discover if anything could be done to save them. Singularly enough, Webster had saved Lincoln's life, and now Lincoln was called upon to save Webster's life.

Mr. Lincoln called a special meeting of the cabinet to devise means to save the spies' lives. Nothing could be done except to communicate through the secretary of war calling the attention of the authorities at Richmond to the fact that the United States government had always been lenient to Confederate spies and had never tried or sentenced to death any one caught carrying information. The message closed with a threat of inaugurating a different code in future if the spies were executed.

Neither the fact pointed out nor the threat availed. Webster was hanged. Miss Lewis was imprisoned for a year, and the two men who caused the tragedy were imprisoned for twenty-two months. It is not probable that they would have escaped had they not implicated Webster. But it must be remembered that they had only indirectly been spies.

The last event of similarity between Mr. Lincoln and Webster occurred three years later, when Mr. Lincoln was again the object of the assassin's bullet. The double tragedy contains two singular coincidences. Both died for the cause, though neither of them as a soldier, and both died tragic deaths, one being hanged for a spy, the other murdered.

Life Saving on Conditions.

A treatise on "how to be kind, but cautious," might be written by a woman who played the part of good Samaritan in the One Hundred and Third street subway station. Another woman had fainted. What she needed to bring her to in a hurry was smelling salts, but nobody had smelling salts.

"I think she has a vinaigrette of her own in that bag," said the Samaritan, "but in the absence of a policeman I am afraid to open it to find out."

Something that looked like a small bottle could be discerned through the meshes of the chain bag, and the crowd, valiantly shifting responsibility, said, "Go ahead and open it."

"On one condition I will," said the Samaritan. "I want three bystanders to watch me and sign a written statement that I have taken nothing from the bag but the vinaigrette. I know this town too well to take any chances on being accused of theft."

The oath was drawn up in a jiffy, three signatures were appended, the Samaritan opened the bag, found the vinaigrette and proceeded with restorative measures.—New York Times.

The Real "Sherlock Holmes."

It was a well known Edinburgh professor of medicine who, all unconsciously, gave Sir Arthur Conan Doyle the idea of "Sherlock Holmes," the most famous detective known in fiction. Sir Arthur studied under him as a medical student.

"Gentlemen," this professor would say to the students, "I am not quite sure whether this man is a cork cutter or a slater. I observe a slight hardening on one side of his forefinger and a little thickening on one side of his thumb, and that is a sure sign that he is one or the other." Or to a patient he would say, "You are a soldier, and you have served in Bermuda as a noncommissioned officer," and then, turning to the students, he would point out that the man came into the room without taking off his hat, as he would enter an orderly room; that his manner showed that he was a noncommissioned officer and that a rash he had on his forehead was known only in Bermuda.

A Fellow Feeling.

A burglar, entering softly by way of the window and looking around him, was rather disconcerted to find a large piece of paper on the table with the words "The Burglar" written on it in large letters. "Meant for me evidently," he said to himself and picked it up. This is what he read: "I know you are coming tonight—never mind how. If you will take away this parcel and lose it effectually you are welcome to what else you can find in this room." Wonderingly he opened the parcel, but at once his face cleared and he understood. "Pore chap, pore chap!" he murmured feelingly. "I'll take 'em for 'im right enough and let 'im off easy too. I'm a father, I am!" For the contents of the parcel were as follows: One toy trumpet, one drum (large), one toy concertina, one tambourine, one musical box, one mouth organ, three tin whistles, one air gun.

First Jewelry Store.

It may interest women to know that the first jewelry store was started in the city of Chang On about 3,000 years ago. The Celestial millionaires of that period knew nothing of the fascination of diamonds, because diamonds were not in vogue at that B. C. period. Pearls and jade and coral and other unpolished mineral substances had to content them, and, as if to make good the glitter of revieres and tiaras, the princes of Chang On employed artisans to fashion them the most wonderful gold and silver ornaments, which in themselves were far more costly than diamonds.

Well Answered.

"Do you see much difference between Americans and Englishmen?" a handsome, spoiled English guardsman is said to have asked a sparkling American girl newly arrived in London society.

"Oh, yes," was her quick reply. "Over there the men admire us; here we are expected to admire you."

They say the astonished soldier almost fell off his chair at the unexpectedness of it.

The Utilitarian.

"Hello, Johnny!" said the village blacksmith. "I hear your paw has gone into politics."

"Sure."

"How'd that happen?"

"Well, my uncle left him a silk hat and a Prince Albert coat in his will, and paw had to do something with them."—Washington Star.

The Remains.

After many unsuccessful attempts a little girl managed to spell "that" correctly. "Now," said her mother, "what remains after 't' is taken away?"

"The dirty cups and saucers!" was the reply.

Blind Man Tries Suicide.

John Paul, known to every man, woman and child in Lock Haven as "Johnny Paul, the blind man" attempted to commit suicide Thursday morning, and that he is alive now is due to the timely arrival of his brother-in-law, who found the unfortunate man dangling at the end of a rope in the garret of his little home on New street. One end of the rope had been fastened to a rafter, while the other end had been carefully looped around the unfortunate man's neck. He was unconscious and in a few moments more would have been dead. He was taken to the hospital.

Paul has been totally blind for the last fifteen years, but he was a familiar figure on the streets and could make his way about the city with as much ease as one in full possession of sight. He was always in good humor and had a cherry answer for every greeting. With a sister, also blind, he lived in a small double house on New street, his brother-in-law occupying the other side of the structure. Within the last few days it has been noted that "Johnny" waa not in his usual merry mood; he appeared down-hearted and despondent, but told his troubles to no one. His attempted suicide has aroused widespread sympathy for the blind brother and sister and steps will probably be taken at once to look after and care for them. Paul is about fifty years of age.

Prosperty Coming.

Reports of the American Railways association, showing the number of idle frieght cars in the United States and Canada on March 29, indicate a change for the first time since last fall in the accumulating surplus of railroad equipment.

On October 26 last there were reported only 7,235 idle freight cars out of a total of about 2,250,000. From that low surplussage of cars the number idle increased until on March 15 it had grown to 205,527.

During the last two weeks the supply of idle cars was reduced by 12,640 to 192,887. Railroad managers hope that this decrease in idle cars means a certain turn for the better, but as to this there are many who are doubtful, and in the meantime, every measure is being taken to hold down operating costs.

CONFIRMED PROOF

Residents of Bellefonte Cannot Doubt What Has Been Twice Proved.

In gratitude for complete relief from aches and pains of bad backs—from distressing kidney ills—thousands have publicly recommended Doan's Kidney Pills. Residents of Bellefonte, who so testified years ago, now say their cures were permanent. This testimony doubly proves the worth of Doan's Kidney Pills to Bellefonte kidney sufferers.

Mrs. James Rine, 239 W. High St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: "Some years ago I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Green's Pharmacy Co., and their use cured me of kidney complaint and backache that had caused me no end of suffering. At that time I told of my experience in a public statement and I now take pleasure in confirming that testimonial. The relief Doan's Kidney Pills gave me has been permanent."

Signa led Lee's Surrender.

Over 75 veterans of the Civil War Sunday evening marched from the court house at Washington, Pa., to the Second Presbyterian Church, where services were held in commemoration of Lee's surrender at Appomattox.

At the head of the line, carrying his battered old cornet, which passed through the war, walked Alexander Rankin, police sergeant there, who nearly half a century ago led the band which struck up, "Home, Sweet Home," just as Lee finally admitted the defeat of the Confederacy.

PRIMARIES CHANGED

The New Measure Designates the Last Saturday in September.

The Tustin Primary bill, which designates the last Saturday of September as the date for primaries in odd numbered years and the second Saturday in April in even numbered years, was approved by the Governor Thursday night. The bill was passed finally in the House Thursday and amendments made by the lower branch concurred in by the Senate.

It is designed to establish primary days to meet conditions caused by ratifications of the constitutional amendments abolishing the February election. The new act provides for April primaries when delegates to state and national conventions are to be chosen, and for September when county and municipal officers are to be nominated. It abolishes the June primary.

One of the most important provisions is that a voter when challenged must swear that he voted for the majority of the candidates of the party, whose ticket he asks, at the last preceding election at which he voted.

The number of petitioners required for opening ballot boxes is fixed at five, who must set forth in their petition to the court that they have information which they consider "reliable" that fraud has been committed.

The Governor also signed the "Pure Sausage" bill, which prohibits the sale of sausage containing water in excess of the quantity the meat contains when slaughtered; cereal, vegetable flour or preservatives or unwholesome meat. The penalty is a fine of from $100 to $200 or imprisonment of from thirty to sixty days.

Other bills signed were: Appropriating $100,000 to reimburse counties which pay to fair associations holding annual exhibitions the $1,000 allowed under act of 1907; validating affidavits, acknowledgements and acts of notaries within three months of time of expiration of term; providing for copies of public documents to exchange with legislative reference bureaus of other states; repealing right to use bear traps.

Value of Little Things.

From waste paper alone one railroad last year realized more than $5000. Pins, pens, nails, old brooms, bottles, tin cans and worn out machinery of all sorts are gathered up along the routes by the railway companies and turned into money. Even the ashes are sold or ultized for improving the roadbed. These things seem small to command the attention of a rich railway company. It must be remembered that the railway company is rich largely because it looks after the little things.

The greatest corporations in the world are not above taking care of even the fractions of pennies. Waste forms one of the most vital questions in economics, not alone for railroads and big manufacturing plants, but for every household.

It is impossible of course, for any very great sum to be realized in the saving of waste in a household. And yet the usual waste in the home is relatively far greater than that of a railroad. We think it mean and miserly to look after the little things. And for that reason, more than any other, human life is cursed with poverty and pauperism. There is less meanness in a poor man's saving a penny than in a rich man's saving a million.

No Faith in Court or Lawyers.

The will of the late Christian Baumgardner, who died at his home in Stoney Creek township, Cambria County, several weeks ago, has just been probated and reveals an unusual condition. This is that no lawyer shall be employed in the settlement of his estate and in no case whatever unless for the forced collection of outstanding debts. In addition he directs that his executrices, Lidia Baumgardner, his widow, and Lydia Baumgardner, his daughter, sell any or all his real estate, when all the heirs mutually agree to price and terms, "without having any order from court or filing any bond for such sale or sales." If any of the legatees contest the will it is directed that they be paid $10, which shall constitute their share of the estate. The widow is given all the household goods and effects and her share in all personal property and the real estate to be equally divided between her and the following children: Andrew Baumgardner, Tena Baumgardner Seese, Abraham Baumgardner, Lydia Baumgardner and Ida Baumgardner Hahn.

DRASTIC ACTION BY METHODISTS

New Yorkers Favor Many Changes in Church Government.

The Laymen's association of the Methodist Episcopal church, of New York, meeting simultaneously with the New York conference, voted by a large majority to petition the general conference to establish district superintendents or presiding elders, rearrange conference boundaries throughout the United States, lay members to have representation in annual and general conferences and extend the terms of pastorates from two to five years.

This program, it is understood, embraces the most radical changes confronting Methodism, since the days of John Wesley and, marks it is said, the beginning of a far-reaching campaign in which the support of every similar organization and annual conference prior to the general conference in Minneapolis in May, 1912, will be asked to join in the petition.

"The office of district superintendent is unnecessary, expensive and a thing of the past," reads the resolution adopted today. "If control and efficiency is the principal of the modern business world, why not put it into the church rather than keep an antiquated system that is inefficient, uneconomical and productive of great abuse?"

The conferences are too large, is another declaration of the resolutions and the association says the routine visits of district superintendents and the quarterly conferences should be abolished, "for they do nothing that the present official board cannot do very much better."

A separate resolution declaring for the extension of the term of pastorates from two to five years, says the existing time limit is "generally unsatisfactory to ministers and laymen, and a hindrance to the work in many of our churches."

It Pays to Advertise.

Look over the newspapers, magazines and pamphlets in every corner of the globe, then look over the signs before the public in various ways, from the modern electric sign to the one on the fence, and there is no argument against advertising and its results.

If there is any doubt after the above facts have been investigated, let them call on the large department stores in this country and have a talk with the ad. man, or the company who pays him a large salary to do nothing but write and frame up advertising, and I believe they will be convinced that it pays to advertise.

Some people advertise spasmodically, the way some people take medicine for the rheumatism. They need help and go to the doctor and get a few doses or to a drug store and get a few pills, and if after they have taken it they are not entirely free from the trouble the remedy is condemned. This is the way some business men advertise. They find out they have got a big stock of goods and help to dispose of same. Now, then, he puts a little ad. in the paper so small that no one can read it, for fear it will cost something, and then condemns the ad. as no good because people did not see it.

Our idea of advertising that pays is good looking display and plenty of it, and which, if followed closely and carefully worded, is bound to bring results. But it should be followed up day to day and week to week, changing the wording as occasion required.

This method keeps your trade posted, and it is only a short time when the whole public are familiar with your line and know just where to go to find what they want.

The man who is engaged in any mercantile business, and does not advertise, certainly cannot expect to do much business, if the man right across the road does advertise.

Our argument is that if it pays one business firm to advertise, it will pay them all.

The public are educated in and depend upon advertising-and it is a custom among the American people that will stand as long as the world stands.—Printer Exchange Journal.

Almost Balanced.

The decision of the Supreme Court establishing the corporation tax as constitutional, practically settles the fact that the United States Treasury will be able to close the fiscal year without a deficit.

The deficit of the current fiscal year has steadily diminished for several months past, and it is to date of March 21, only $3,907, 833. A year ago at this date it was $22,008,338 and in March, 1906, the deficit ran to $30,000,000. By the end of the fiscal year, the revenues of the government will be equal to its expenditure and in the coming fiscal year there will be a surplus, as the appropriations show no increase, while the revenue is certain to grow.

THE MAIL ORDER QUESTION

Another Phase of it That Contains More Truth Than Poetry.

The following sidelight on the mail order question, from an exchange, contains more truth than poetry:

A dry goods merchant was starting down town when his wife reminded him of his most important duty during the day. "Now, my dear, be sure and don't forget to send to the city for that new Stanhope, so we have it by Sunday. You know our old buggy is getting so it's not fit to be seen."

Just a few blocks away the merchant who handles vehicles and implements was sitting at breakfast with his family. The conversation drifted around to the near approach of school. "And that reminds me, John," said the lady who sat at the head of the table. "That I must be going to the city no later than next week. I must get goods for the children's school clothes and then see about a fall suit for myself, and while I'm there perhaps I'd better see about a new rug for the parlor and some lace curtains for the front windows."

An hour or two later the town's leading grocer stepped into the bank to buy a draft, which he was going to send a catalogue house for a "swell" bedroom suit. How's business?" asked the banker. "Oh not so very good," replied the coffee and sugar merchant, resignedly. "Things are a little dull just now."

Before the banker finished writing the draft a dapper young man with a grip stepped in and asked how everybody was. He was the representative of a big printing establishment in another State. He and the banker chatted pleasantly for a few minutes, after which the young man inquired casually of his friend behind the window if he wanted anything. "Well, yes, replied the other good naturedly. "I believe I do. Print us 5,000 checks, 5,000 drafts and a couple thousand letter heads." The young man thanked him cordially for the order and bustled out.

That night the local business men had a meeting in the town hall to discuss the growth of the mail order evil. All of the gentlemen mentioned in the narrative delivered short talks. They all agreed that the farmers were guilty of treason to their home merchants when they persisted in buying their goods of mail order houses, and the meeting closed by adopting strong resolutions against trading away from home—York (Neb.) Daily News.

State Masonic Home.

The Williamsport Sun says that James B. Krause, of that city, who is a member of the State Masonic Home committee, was in Philadelphia a few days ago attending a meeting of the committee held for the purpose of opening bids for the erection of the Masonic home building at Elizabethtown, Lancaster County. The estimated cost of the buildings to be erected is $400,000.

Some time ago, as the result of an architect's competition, Professor Laird, of the University of Pennsylvania, and John T. Windrim, as judges for the committee, awarded a prize of $1,000 to Messrs. Zanzinger, Borie and Madiera, architects, for the best plan for the home. The first building to be erected is Grand Lodge hall, to accommodate 150 persons. The future development of the settlement will be along the cottage plan. The home is to be used for the care of men, women and children.

Grand Lodge hall will be 324 feet long, and with a "service" wing will be about 425 feet long. The principal front of the building faces the south. In the western end will be a library and sitting room for women. Under the central portion, and extending out under the terrace, will be a bowling alley. On the first floor will be parlors and sitting rooms along the south front, and offices and coat rooms on the north front. On the second floor will be thirty bedrooms and committee rooms.

In the eastern part of the building will be a large dinner hall, 140 feet long and 40 feet wide. Connected with the dining room is the "service" wing, containing pantries, kitchens, servants' dining room and rooms for men servants.

On a level with the main floor and on the southerly side of Grand Lodge hall is to be an open terrace, 220 feet long. On the third floor of the building will be a dormitory for fifty-sx persons. Cottages to be erected will be connected with the main building by covered passageways.

Winding in and about the buildings will be driveways. The grounds will be laid out suitably by a landscape gardener, and beyond the buildings will be broad farms, operated in connection with the home.

Massive Grandstand Contracted For.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Allentown Fair Association, the contract for the new $100,000 grandstand to be erected on the fair grouuds at Allentown, was awarded to the Ochs Construction Co., of Allentown, at $84,793, for an eleven span structure.

The new grandstand, a doubledecker, 463 feet long, equipped with a promenade, will contain 7400 chairs. Fully equipped, its cost will probably exceed $100,000.

Beecher and the Hen.

The Rev. E. H. Romig, of the First Congregational Church, of Germantown-is one of the most fluent story tellers in the Philadelphia district. At all the weekly and monthly events of the ministers he is always relating stories. One of his banner yarns was the one he told in a meeting of the ministers at the Central Young Men's Christian Associa, tion on Henry Ward Beecher the other day.

He said that Henry Ward Beecher went to a small New England village to preach one Sunday morning early in his ministry. The most available place was a barn, and while the people gathered Mr. Beecher sat on a saw-horse. Presently a large plymouth rock hen walked over the barn floor in front of the great preacher. As he remarked "What a beautiful creature!" the hen laid an egg in his hat that lay on the floor.

"It was but a few days later," continued Mr. Romig, "that by mail came a little verse from a well-known wag, who was a witness to the incident, that read like this:

"Said a great congregational preacher
To a hen, 'What a beautiful creature!'
In return for that
She laid an egg in his hat
And thus did the Hen-Re-Ward Beecher."

Road Question in a Nutshell.

Just a few figures:

Wagon roads in the United States 2,-151,570 miles.

Improved (faced with gravel or something better) 175,429 miles.

Per cent of improved roads 8.2.

Each year 265,000,000 tons of farm products are hauled to market or to railway stations over American road.

This hauling costs $432,000,000, or 23 cents per ton per mile.

It costs about 10 cents per ton per mile to haul freight over an improved road.

Thus, if all our roads were improved it would mean a saving of $200,000,000 a year in hauling alone.

It will cost fully $3,000,000,000 to put all the mud roads in America in fair shape to make them merely good gravel roads.

Three billion dollars is a big sum; $200,000,000 per year for fifteen years would settle the bill.

This country of ours is the richest in the world, yet the poorest, and most any tax-burdened country can boast of better roads than we can.

Odd, isn't it?

Brook Trout at Discouut.

Fingerling brook trout went begging at Lewistown on Saturday for the first time in the history of the State hatcheries. Sixty-one cans had been placed in Mifflin county streams in the past week. Thirty cans arrived at the Pennsylvania railroad depot Saturday from the State hatchery at Spruce creek, and the sportsmen failed to meet them according to schedule, and so they were given out to individuals and the greater portion placed in private streams.

Old fishermen, who have made trout culture a study, say putting fish in the streams at this cold season is a waste of time. The water in the cans is of medium temperature, and the sudden dash into the almost ice-cold water kills them in a couple of days. Others claim that too many fish are put in the streams for the amount of food provided by nature, and trout, being cannibalistic by nature, feed on one another.

Roofing Guarantees.

When a maker guarantees his roofing, it merely means that he puts his claims for it in writing, and if there is any dispute afterwards, there are thousands of ways in which the maker can evade responsibility if he chooses.

The makers of Congo Roofing, however, have devised an interesting plan which gives the buyer absolute protection. With each roll of roofing is furnished a Surety Bond issued by the National Surety Company of New York, guaranteeing the faithful performance of the guaratee by the manufacturers. This gives to any possible complainant a Court of Appeals to which he can go, over the head of the manufacturer. In fact, this guaratee bond so pledges that if the manufacturers of Congo Roofing should go bankrupt or close out their business, the Surety Company would still continue to guarantee the reliability and satisfaction of Congo Roofing. The guarantee on the two or three ply is for 10 years.

LIFE INSURANCE
is Practical Prudence;

It is money put out at interest; it is an investment for wife and children; it is a border of sunlight along the edge of the cloud of bereavement; it is the flower of love surviving the frost of death; it is a man's freedom of will in tune with God's sovereignty. All this and more--but remember that good intentions never yet accomplished results--it takes action.
